More Money For Madison County Farmers

It is the farmer who goes ahead and does things—who thinks clearly and decides wisely, who makes the real red-letter winning nowadays. And there is no better evidence of the fact that the farmers of this county are men who think, take hold and accomplish than the fact that they are taking and unusual interest in the fence question at this time. It is a big question and a vital one. A fence may be either a source of loss, annoyance, disappointment, or it may be a source of profit, protection and permanent peace of mind.

Any farmer who goes seriously into the matter will speedily find that for real reasons the American Fence stands incomparably above every other fence material offered. In service, protection to stock, weather-resisting power and long life will prove a real money-maker and money-saver to any farmer, large or small. Many weights and styles of American fence are shown at Remarkable Instance of Identity Established.

(DeLand Register)

One day last week as the editor of the Register, came out of the postoffice, he was hailed by a handsome, gray-haired man apparently sixty-five years of age. Said he:

"I hear you are from Kentucky?"

"I have the honor, sir," he replied. "And are you from that State?" we asked, as he took our hand in the fashion of the Kentucky State Seal, "United We Stand; Divided We Fall."

The gentleman gave his name as "James D. Sprake, born in 1835 on the Forks of Elkhorn, Fayette county, Kentucky."

As we gazed upon him with increased interest at the brief narrative of his nativity, we remarked—and here is the remarkable part of the narrative—"Mr. Sprake, you are strikingly like my old Confederate friend, Dr. Coleman D. Pattie, of Richmond, Ky., himself a good likeness of the late Governor J. Proctor Knott of that State."

"Ah," said Mr. Sprake—who for a wonder acknowledged he was not a colored, but only a private—"ah, Pattie and I marched together, fought together, were captured together and spent eighteen months together in the same prison, at Camp Morton at Indianapolis, and at Camp Douglas, Chicago."

"Think of it, dear reader! To meet a perfect stranger, remark upon his striking resemblance to a man a thousand miles away, and learn that they had been mess-mates in war fifty years before!"

Remarkable! Further questioning of Mr. Sprake elicited the fact that he was born within twenty miles of our friend, Dr. Pattie, the latter first seeing the day light near Frankfort, Ky., and that both were captured at Bullington's Island with John Morgan and all landed in prison together. Mr. Sprake recalls three of Dr. Pattie's cousins taken at same time, Dan and Sam Payne and Crockett, in Captain Tom McCann's Company of Klake's 5th Ky., C. S. A.

Glancing at the empty sleeve that hung at his left side, we inquired as to the cause. "That arm," said Mr. Sprake, was lost when I was a mere child. I went to war and did a soldier's part with one hand only. I was never paroled and never took the oath of allegiance," said he, "but I am loyal to my country and Old Glory just the same."

As these old veterans are descending the hill of life to its sunset valley, let us recall the words of General Bennett H. Young, of Louisville, Ky., a gallant Confederate, who last week at Jacksonville, paid loving tribute to the dead of the "Lost Cause."

Men of Florida who wore the gray, ye be yourself heroes and the companions and associates of heroes, who have by their daring, courage and endurance, won eternal fame.

"But, comrades, we survivors are only a few of that great host. Only a thin and ever thinning line remains."

"The living are only a small company. One-tenth we saw die under our glorious banner on fields of strife, one-third fell victims to war's remorseless exactions. Of the remaining 400,000, all have departed and have gone to be with the immortals but 60,000."

"There can be no recruits added to that splendid host who glorified the Southland. The books are sealed. Millions of dollars cannot buy a place on this roll of Confederate survivors. Hour by hour we are answering what no earthly power can resist or avoid."

NEW-MADE GRAVES.

"A Georgia mother, during the war, shortly after some of the greatest battles in Virginia, lingered for weeks about the new-made graves scattered over the scene of conflict. Her face betokened a great and consuming sorrow. Inquired of as to why she long remained amid such scenes of desolation and gloom, she answered: 'All my treasures are here; my five sons all sleep beneath these new-made mounds and rest in these lonely sepulchers.'"

"Comrades, nine-tenths of our Confederate riches are buried. Only one-tenth of the brave and gallant heroes that aligned under the Confederate banner in 1861, remain on the earthly side. The other nine-tenths have gone before. Here and there we meet a criticism of our devotion to the memories of the past and our recalling the experiences of the awful ordeals of the war. No brave man will deny this privilege. We love our country, but we also love our glorious dead; and, while we love, we shall pay them the tribute their courage and their greatness deserve."

"Without sword or flag and with soundless tread
Once more we summon our deathless dead
Out of their silent graves,
The foemen need not frown, these all are powerless now,
And tears and prayers are the only crown
With which we wreath each brow."

"Gather them, one, and all, from the private to the chief,
They died for us and for them there falls
The tears of a nation's grief."

Came to the End.

"This is a man's game, and I will play it to the end," was the word that Benjamin Guggenheim, the millionaire smelter magnate, sent to his wife from the ill-fated Titanic by an expert swimmer who was saved.

"Tell her, Johnson," the steward replied, "that I played the game straight to the end and that no woman was left on board this ship because Ben Guggenheim was a coward. To tell her that my last thoughts were of her and our girls."

Guggenheim then, according to Johnson, lit a cigar and sauntered up to the boat deck to help load the boats. He afterward returned to the main deck and went down with the ship.
